Who is Sarah Dunderawy

Sarah Dunderawy is a prominent Saudi journalist and media personality, recognized as one of the leading faces of Al Arabiya. Born in Jeddah, she is the daughter of renowned Saudi writer and intellectual Mohammed Salah Dunderawy, whose influence inspired her media career. Currently based in Dubai, UAE, Sarah began her professional journey with Al Arabiya in 2005 as a news editor and reporter. She quickly advanced to producing and hosting programs, including the monthly health show 'Daleel Al Afia' in 2010. She later co-hosted 'Sabah Al Arabiya' from late 2011 to early 2015, and during Ramadan 2014, she presented 'Ala Al Kanaba,' a show highlighting social media trends. Her breakthrough came in 2015 with the launch of her acclaimed daily program 'Tafa'ulkom' on Al Arabiya, which covers trending political, social, entertainment, and sports topics. The show's success has cemented Sarah's reputation as a professional and influential media figure in the Arab world.

Achievements of Sarah Dunderawy

Sarah Dunderawy is regarded as a trailblazer among her generation of Saudi female media professionals. Her flagship program 'Tafa'ulkom,' launched in 2015 and still running successfully on Al Arabiya, stands out as a major achievement, serving as a leading daily platform for tracking and analyzing trending issues across the Arab world. In 2011, she was selected as a judge for MBC1's 'Mossabaqat Al Jamahir' alongside media icon George Kordahi and actress Mona Zaki, reflecting early recognition of her career. Sarah received the 'Outstanding Media Performance' award from the May Chidiac Foundation (MCF), honoring her professional journey, distinctive on-air style, and her ability to engage with prominent figures from various fields.
